EDITORIAL

Premier University has been established in the beginning of the millennium. It has now five faculties and more than six thousand students. It is recognized as one of the best universities in Bangladesh. Needless to say, its fame has spread beyond the borders of Bangladesh. In the beginning the task of the university was only to impart knowledge to students. Presently it has embarked on creating new knowledge which is an imperative task of all universities. Universities do not become universities in the proper sense of the term unless they fulfill these two criteria- teaching and creating knowledge.

Premier Critical Perspectives, the new journal of Premier University, which is being brought out, we hope, will be a journal where teachers and eminent scholars will be able to give expressions to their creativity. We also believe, a knowledge-based society can't be built if the members of that society do not have the desire and means to develop their imagination, rational thinking and philosophical pursuits. Hence, we want to make Premier Critical Perspectives a journal where there will be an opportunity for the efflorescence of creativity in all its manifestations.

In this issue, we have published fourteen articles. Two of the articles are on economics, five contributions come from literature and language department, three from law, two from CSE and two from Business Studies.

All contributors are young and can be considered intellectual fledglings. For many of the contributors writing for PCP was their maiden scholarly attempt and naturally was balked by doubts and hesitations. However, the resulting uncertainty should not be viewed too critically. We are confident that Premier University has glorious future before it and in coming days the PU faculties will tread the academic turf with firmer steps.

We regret that We couldn't make the journal free of all lapses. In future, we are sure the lapses of the present issue will be removed and a tidier journal will be handed out to the readers. We are grateful to Professor Quazi Mostain Billah for the help he has extended to us in editing this volume.
